An article in the Australian Jewish News (27 May 2011) – Uni Party Turns Ugly by Naomi Levin, caught my eye:

A police report has been filed following an allegedly violent incident during the Australasian Union of Jewish Students' (AUJS) Yom Ha'atzmaut (Israel Independence Day) celebrations.

The lunchtime party, held on University of Melbourne grounds, turned ugly when an individual used wirecutters to vandalise a stereo playing Israeli music. He is then alleged to have struck an AUJS member, injuring him with the wirecutters.

Both police and security were present at the event and two individuals were reportedly removed from the scene.

... the AUJS event consisted of music and dancing on the university lawns and could not have been misconstrued as a political rally.

AUJS leaders and Jewish Community Council of Victoria (JCCV) president John Searle have called on the police to lay charges relating to the individual's alleged possession of a weapon, vandalism and assault.
